

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
A	D	A	B	C	D	C	A	D	A
11	12	13	14	15	16	17	18	19	20
C	D	B	D	B	B	D	D	C	B
21	22	23	24	25	26	27	28	29	30
A	B	B	C	B	D	B	A	B	A
31	32	33	34	35	36	37	38	39	40
A	D	B	B	C	D	B	C	A	B

EXEMPLE D'UNE BONNE COPIE

How important do you think food is in contemporary society? Give examples to support your answer.

Just as society has evolved over time, our food system has also evolved into a global system of immense size and complexity. As this system has drastically changed, from one centered around family food production on individual farms and home food preservation to the modern system of today, most people are not connected to their food nor are they familiar with agricultural production and food manufacturing designed for better food safety and quality. Yet, thanks to our current production-to-consumption system, what we eat is largely safe, tasty, nutritious, abundant, diverse, convenient, less costly and more readily accessible than ever before.

Nowadays, our freedom to choose what we eat is greater and more important to us than before. Indeed, food manufacturers are seeking safer, tastier and more diverse products. The quality of our food is better than it used to be thanks to science and technology. Moreover, our eating habits have changed considerably. We often buy processed food containing too much fat, sugar or salt. Advertising has also influenced our preferences and the fast food industry has made us lazy. It is easier to go to McDonald's than to prepare our own meals at home. This attitude has led to a higher incidence of diabetes and heart disease in our western societies. However, there are other options like organic food which is more expensive but healthier.

To conclude, in order to benefit from our modern food system, we must modify our eating habits and recognize what is good for us and what is not. We must be more aware of the choices available on the market and reconsider our approach to food.

In your opinion, what does today's youth dream about?

In my opinion, unlike the hippies of the sixties, today's youth do not dream about a world of peace and love in the utopian sense. In our individualistic society, they might dream about sorting out their lives and building a future for themselves.

Nowadays, the future of young people is not limited to working in the family business and raising a large family. They want to have a good education, a satisfying job and a chance to travel. They dream about the "perfect life" inspired by wealthy and successful people.

Of course, they may also dream about a better world where human beings count more than profit or money. But the values and issues have changed. Young people wonder about the future of our planet. They care about global warming, the environment or sustainable development.

In conclusion, young people might dream about what lies in store for them. Indeed, with the constant development of science and technology, our world is changing rapidly and today's youth must adapt.